

Greetings

We believe that the need to create open spaces, such as the UNESCO Sustainability Chair, and tools, such as the journal Sostenible?, is still highly relevant because it stimulates intellectual debate about the role of technology in development, especially in a technical university and a social and geopolitical environment such as ours.

This eleventh issue of the journal Sostenible? sees the start of a new stage in its history. Its new format and medium makes it possible to publish more papers in each issue and include longer, in-depth papers. The new format also reinforces the University's institutional policy to publish open-source scientific content, which is a fairly widespread practice at universities across the world. This also fulfils UNESCO's strategic goal of promoting and facilitating the use of ICTs as tools for disseminating science, culture and education. Indeed, the vast majority of the journal's readers read it in its electronic format on the UPCommons website, where all of the issues published to date can be read free of charge.

However, we believed there was a case for continuing to issue a short overview of each issue of the journal on paper, in the hope that this would encourage readers to go on to read the journal in full. It includes an introduction to the issue, an editorial and the abstracts of the papers in the three languages (Catalan, Spanish and English) in which the journal is published.

We hope the journal's new format and its content are to your liking.

Enric Carrera
Scientific director of the journal Sostenible?
